

SUSTAINABILITY POLICY

Machu Picchu Foods S.A.C.'s Sustainability Policy addresses challenges in the cocoa and chocolate industry by promoting sustainable development across environmental, social, and economic aspects. This strategic framework aims to align our operations with the highest international standards, in collaboration with our stakeholders, while enhancing our positive influence on communities, the environment, our workforce, and the entire value chain. Our commitments center on these strategic pillars that advocate for responsible and regenerative practices, engaging employees and partners to manage and mitigate socio-environmental impacts, thereby fostering an organizational culture rooted in sustainability.

Sustainable cacao

Implement agroforestry systems and regenerative agricultural practices to enhance soil productivity and health while contributing to biodiversity conservation through reforestation initiatives in cocoa-producing regions.

Climate resilience and climate initiatives

Assess and mitigate our corporate carbon footprint throughout the entire value chain, while also tracking carbon sequestration in our regenerative agriculture initiatives to enhance their beneficial environmental effects.

Social advancement and community welfare

- Promote social action initiatives that cultivate the advancement of a more cohesive and sustainable society through technology and innovation.
- Cultivate a culture of sustainability at Machu Picchu Foods by advancing employee development and overseeing their social well-being, while also promoting their active engagement in corporate volunteering.
- Enhance the technical and business capabilities of farmers and their families while improving access to essential services, including education, healthcare, and infrastructure within agricultural communities.

Responsible manufacturing and traceability

Ensure adherence to local and international quality and sustainability regulations by integrating circular economy principles to enhance resource utilization and reduce waste across the supply chain, alongside ethical traceability from the cocoa's origin to the final product.

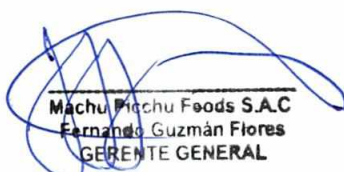

Corporate Governance

Promote business strategies grounded in the principles of sound corporate governance, a fundamental pillar that fosters transparency in the management of all stakeholders involved in our activities, thereby facilitating the ethical conduct of all our processes.

At Machu Picchu Foods S.A.C., we are dedicated to establishing mechanisms for assessing the advancement of our commitments via annual sustainability reports and indicators of social, environmental, and economic impact. This policy will undergo a review every two years to ensure its conformity with regulatory developments and industry best practices.
